NANAIMO MUSEUM

CHARACTERS, CON MEN & CELEBRITIES

1903 celebration to honour Samuel Robins (seated behind table). Robins is one of the people featured in the spring feature exhibit (NM I3-15)

Feature Exhibition: February 1 - May 7

The latest feature exhibit includes remarkable people from Nanaimo's past including petty thieves, poets, murderers, politicians, a conservation officer and others. The exhibit features artifacts and photos from the Nanaimo Museum's collections. Thirty fascinating people from Nanaimo's past are profiled in the exhibit. "There are many interesting people in Nanaimo's history who haven't fit with past feature exhibits," says Aimee Greenaway, Interpretation Curator at the Nanaimo Museum. "Characters, Con Men & Celebrities gave us an opportunity to showcase some of these remarkable and entertaining stories for the community." The exhibit includes people from diverse backgrounds including those who were working class, rich, women and various ethnic groups. "This isn't your usual museum exhibit," says Greenaway. "Most of the people have stories that could be turned into a bestselling novel or blockbuster movie."

The exhibit does not place anyone into the categories of characters, con men or celebrities. "The role of the museum was to research these intriguing people and present their stories," says Greenaway. "We hope the visitors will read the stories and be their own judge of who is a character, con man or celebrity." Visitors are invited to go on the Nanaimo Museum's Facebook page and post answers to the question "Who do you think deserves the title of Nanaimo's most fascinating character, con (wo)man or celebrity?" Postings can be made for one person in each category or just a single overall favorite. This in-house exhibit made possible by a generous bequest from Mary Holmes.

Artifact Acquisitions

First Nations Stone Tools

Two anchor stones and a fish net sinker were donated to the museum by Gillian Darling Kovanic. Her family has owned property on Gabriola Island since 1915 and she found the tools while exploring Clarke Bay beach in 1965. The museum has other anchor stones and fish net sinkers in the collection but none can be precisely pinpointed to a location in the traditional territory of the Snuneymuxw First Nations. Gabriola Island was an important spring and summer village site for the Snuneymuxw.

Collections Plan

We are nearly two years into a full inventory of the artifact collection. This process allows us to ensure artifact locations are updated in the database, review the collection in its entirety and reorganize artifact storage spaces. Getting hands-on with the collection allows the younger generation of staff to learn more about the artifacts and tap into the expertise of long-term staff.

Adopt an Artifact

Barbara Mar Memorial Donations

Family and friends of the late Barbara Mar made generous contributions in her memory to the Nanaimo Museum's Adopt an Artifact program at the $5000 level. After careful consideration, museum staff selected a grouping of three artifacts to be dedicated in Mrs. Mar's name: Chinese pillows for winter, summer and travel. These were donated to the museum by her father, Ed Lee, in the 1960s and 1970s. They are currently on display in the Chinatown section of the Hub City exhibit. Without the support of Ed and Marion Lee, the community would not have such a rich Chinese collection.

MUSEUM NEWS

Pecha Kucha

September 2015

Aimee participated in a Pecha Kucha presentation last fall, Mines and Yours: Honouring Heritage in Nanaimo that featured perspectives on Nanaimo's cultural past, present, and future. Pecha Kucha presentations are held all over the world and strictly adhere to a 20x20 format where each speaker has 20 seconds to talk about 20 Powerpoint slides that feature images. The short time frame forces speakers to be succinct and allows audience members to hear from a diverse series of presenters. Aimee focused on her personal connection to Nanaimo's history as a 6th generation resident and how artifacts and their stories can engage the community in local heritage.

BC Museums Association Conference Recap

October 2015

Debbie, Becca and Aimee attended the BC Museums Association conference in New Westminster last fall. As part of the conference schedule, Aimee delivered two presentations. The first was Embracing Controversy: The Nanaimo Museum's Red Lights & Roulette exhibit. The purpose of the presentation was to share a small museum's experience creating an exhibit on a controversial topic. The Red Lights & Roulette feature exhibit from February 2015 focused on Fraser Street's sex trade at the turn of the 20th century. True to the presentation's title about controversy, a few intense debates were sparked by audience members. The question and answer period was lengthy with great audience participation.

Aimee played a much smaller role in her second presentation where she was on a panel discussing the museum's role as a pilot for the Chinese Canadian Artifact Inventory Project (CCAP). Highlights of this presentation for Aimee included the opportunity to share stories from Nanaimo's Chinatown that are connected to artifacts in the museum's collection.

Suzanne Samborski, Director of Culture for the City of Nanaimo's Culture and Heritage Department also attended the conference. Samborski accepted the "2015 BC Museums Association Outstanding Achievement Corporate Service Award" on behalf of the City. Nominated by the museum, the award acknowledges the City as a culture leader in the province for the innovative and unique creation of the Cultural Managers Working Group (CMWG), which supports the City's initiatives that encourage a creative and engaged community.
